UNDER THE AEGIS OF SOCIETÀ PSICOANALITICA ITALIANA

War has once again broken out in Europe. However, recent wars, such as that in the former Yugoslavia, are far from sufficiently processed, and their wounds still fester. This heavily affects the lives of the groups and individuals involved.

The war continues to raise numerous questions both about analytic practice in wartime and afterward. Above all, it rekindles our interest, as psychoanalysts, in the psychic mechanisms activated by such tragic events, which reappear with a regularity that leaves us dumbfounded and, to a large extent, powerless. Ninety years ago, Albert Einstein and Sigmund Freud wondered about human destructiveness and the possibility of being able to counter and contain it.

In this conference, jointly organized by the Libero and Zora Polojaz Foundation and the Veneto Center for Psychoanalysis on "Psychoanalytic Thinking and the Experience of War," we propose to reflect from a psychoanalytic standpoint with colleagues who, in recent wars, as in the one in progress, have experienced them firsthand. We know that psychoanalytic reflection is fruitful if it is articulated with clinical work-in this case, with those who have experienced the suffering and attempted to heal it in others and themselves
